A LITTLE DISFIGURED BUT STILL IN THE RING.

A MAN WHO WEARS.

Harrison Never Pails Below the Standard in Statesmanship.

It is easy to say that Harrison is a man whose personality does not excite enthusiasm. He is not a hurrah candidate, in other words. There is nothing picturesque and sensational about him and men are not in the habit of speaking of him in fervent and exaggerated terms. But he is a man who wears and who never fails below public expectation in tests of practical statesmanship and unselfish devotion to the public interests. It may be a misfortune for him that he does not have the faculty of making himself familiar with all kinds of people but certainly it must be acknowledged that he is always courteous and considerate, and is not that enough in a man occupying a position of our passing dignity and importance?

He does not plop over in the way of personal compliment and flattery, but he does observe the rules of civility and propriety. His disposition is not of that effusive order which brings men cheap popularity, but he bears himself always like a good tempered and self respecting gentleman. The country has never had cause to be ashamed of him. He is equal to any emergency of his great office, and his private character is entirely irreproachable. Surely a man of whom so many creditable things can be said may be forgiven for occasional lack of warmth in his intercourse with visiting politicians and office seekers.

The people of the United States do not demand that a candidate for president shall be a man of the hail-fellow-well-met variety. They do not estimate him by his capability for making himself agreeable under all circumstances but according to his qualifications for the duties to be performed and the responsibilities to be assumed. It does not matter whether he is exactly the right one to please everybody or not so long as he is known to be a man of satisfactory ability and unquestionable integrity.

Harrison is that kind of a man. He has been president for over three years and the people have become well acquainted with him in every respect. They know that his course has been consistent and patriotic, and that no serious fault can be found with any of his proceedings. Such a record counts for more than the reputation of being a good companion and a magnetic hand shaker. When there is a man to be selected for a difficult and laborious task we do not ask how he receives callers but what his fitness is for substantial and useful work.

That is the proper way to look at Harrison, and that is the way in which the American people will regard him as a candidate for re-election. Those who may vote against him for the reason that he is not a social favorite will be few in number, and that is the point of least importance. There is a crisis to be met in operating him. He has done nobly in the ability to meet all the requirements of the place, and that is the best guarantee of successful service in the future as well as the best claim to reward from an appreciative and grateful country.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Democratic Diplomacy.

There is fine irony in the Democratic platform. It says: The Democratic party is the only party that has ever given the country a foreign policy consistent and vigorous, compelling respect abroad and inspiring confidence at home." Mr. Cleveland's chief exploit was the negotiation of a discreditable Samoan surrender, a policy of inaction and affront toward Mexico and a friendship compensation scheme, the worst feature of which was a very nearly successful attempt to put the broadest point of the Cleveland administration into Mr. Harrison's most complete failure.—New York Tribune.

Mugwumps Come High.

Self opinionated, obstinate, impertinent advice, ungrateful, impertinent support to his party, what claim has he upon the working masses of his organization? That he is admitted by certain Republicans who are so ignorant as to overrate the assumed talk of the earth is true, and that he can command a few such votes in every state is also true. But for every mugwump vote that he draws this year he will lose at least two disgusted Democrats.—New York Advertiser.

Without New York.

The New York men will come home with the same report of hostility to Cleveland with which they went to Chicago installed, and they will be ready to allow the western and northwestern delegates, who have disinstalled and humiliated them, to carry out their boast of electing the "stiffest prophet" without the aid of New York.—Buffalo Commercial.

Grover's Transatlantic Bundle.

The $50,000 which was subscribed for the foreign steamship running in New York still to prevent Cleveland's re election in 1892 has wheetled the Democratic appetite for more of the same kind from transatlantic monopolists.—Boston Journal.

The Great Gobbler.

Senator Hill is a young man yet, and he has done pretty well for a man of his age. There'll be several chances to gobble up the earth between now and the day set for its dissolution.—Washington Post.

Whose Reverence?

Of the vice presidential candidates on the Democratic ticket one may quote Mark Twain's lines. "Perhaps, what did not say the gentleman's name was"—Philadelphia Press.

Waiting for November.

It was passing David Bennett Hill
Who stroked his smooth, bald head
All in the evening calm and still,
And not a word he said;
But he fingered the blade of a rusty knife,
And coolly greensome smile,
And thought to himself, "You bet your life
I just wish a little while."
—New York Recorder

ENGLAND LIKES HIM.

British Papers Pleased with Cleveland's Candidacy.

Mr. Cleveland's nomination was inevitable. He had no competitor of anything like equal weight. The Democrats denounce protection with vigor. This leaves nothing to desire. The net result is to make the two parties fairly issue on this vital point.—London Daily News.

Englishmen will watch Mr. Cleveland's campaign with cordial sympathy, for it rests on his tariff policy in accord with the orthodox economic school of England. But the party platform wisely condemned the arrogant and irritating foreign policy of its opponents.—London Graphic.

The nomination of Mr. Cleveland ends one of the fiercest political fights ever waged in the United States. The breach between the warring factions will probably extend to the presidential contest and will tell seriously against Mr. Cleveland's prospects. Perhaps the most remarkable event of the convention was the complete overthrow of the protection element and the reinstatement of the Mills feeling. Briefly described, the outcome of the convention is a repetition of the struggle of 1888, and while the Democratic cleavage is as wide as it is now the outlook certainly favors the election of Mr. Harrison.—London Echo.

The editors of the Berlin Post, Vossische Zeitung, Borsen Courier, Tageblatt and other papers said that they had written so much in favor of Mr. Cleveland that nothing remained to be said. They all extolled Mr. Cleveland's honesty and hoped that his election would cause the repeal of the McKinley tariff law.

Forced on His Party.

It is unprecedented that a presidential candidate is forced upon his own state in opposition to the unanimous vote of its regularly constituted, recognized and unchallenged delegation can carry that state. Mr. Cleveland has been forced upon New York in the teeth not only of a solid delegation held together under the unit rule, but a delegation every one of whose members has, more or less explicitly, expressed individual preference for Mr. Cleveland as a candidate, and has given his reasons for his opposition to Mr. Cleveland as a candidate. These seventy-two delegates have no confidence in Mr. Cleveland's ability to carry the state, they do not approve his use of executive power during his term of office, and the overwhelming sentiment of the voters of their party in this state qualifies them to speak with authority when they declare that their opponents are chasing [illegible] —New York Commercial.
